What attracted you to Willis Towers Watson?

The opportunity in Global Placement was the key attraction for me. That together with the firm's focus on innovation, analytics and the emphasis on staying ahead of the curve in a rapidly evolving market was an appealing career proposition.

How would you describe the culture at Willis Towers Watson?

In my current role, I work with colleagues from a variety of disciplines across Great Britain, North America and International. Although a large company with high profile roles, executives are approachable, and always make time to meet with graduates both formally and informally.

What is the most exciting project you have worked on at Willis Towers Watson so far?

My secondment to the Singapore office has provided the most significant learning opportunity so far. In Singapore, I assist the Chief Broking Officer for Asia to implement the Group's placement strategy in the region, in line with the Group's objectives. This has allowed me to build on the skills from my first year with the company gain an in-depth view of how different areas of the business operate while remaining cognizant of different practices and cultures.
